What To Do If You See Signs Of Damage

Hail damage is something most policyholders will have to deal with at least once.

Damage from a hailstorm can leave dents in your roof, siding, and gutters which can turn into dents in your wallet if you don't get it fixed.

This guide will help you spot signs of damage and learn when to seek professional help after a hailstorm.

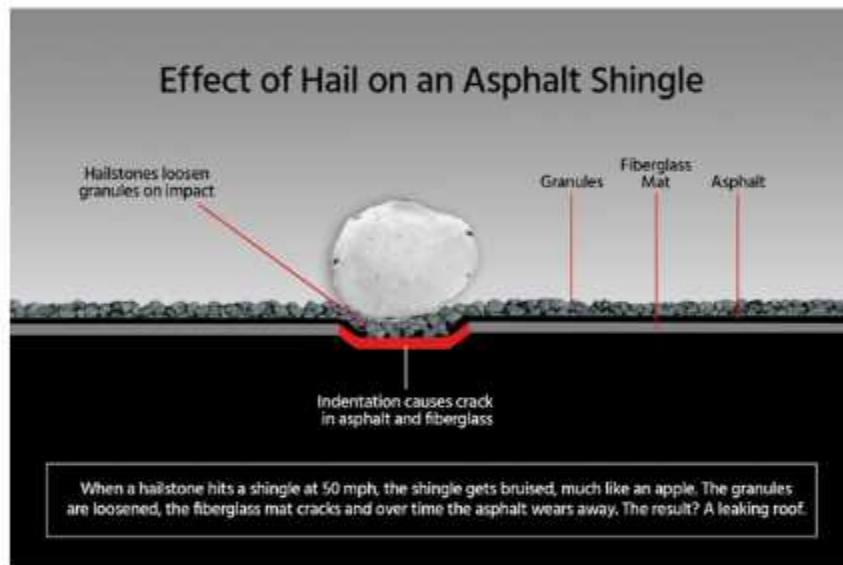

SHOULD YOU BE CONCERNED ABOUT HAIL DAMAGE?

Many policyholders underestimate the damage hailstorms can cause, especially when it comes to their roof.

It doesn't take a lot of hail, or stones of a certain size, to cause damage.

Depending on the age and condition of your roof or siding, even a small hailstorm can damage your home's exterior or accelerate existing damage.

When hail hits hard surfaces the impact creates a hole or bruise. Over time, the damage gets worse. This leads to leaks and expensive problems.

Think about it like this: say you are grocery shopping for apples. You feel each one for bruises or damage before you buy, right?

Bruised apples don't last as long or taste as good. Bruises to your roof are just as bad (even though you're not going to eat it!)

EXAMPLES OF HAIL DAMAGE

This is not a complete list of what hail can damage. These are the most common areas to show examples of what hail damage looks like.

DENTS ON YOUR VEHICLE

If you notice dings on your car, your roof and siding was impacted as well and could have damage.

DENTS IN SIDING

Siding can easily show hail strikes. Look for dents, dings or holes. If your home is painted, look for paint chips as well.

DINGS IN GUTTERS

Soft metals like aluminum are good indicators of the impact a hail storm had on your property as a whole. Even small dents can be troublesome.

DAMAGED WINDOW SCREENS

Damage to window screens can also be a sign of additional damage, as the aluminum or fiberglass material is susceptible to tears by the velocity of hail impacts.
